

Stratford Police Service in partnership with Stratford Northwestern, Stratford Central and St Michael Schools are pleased to offer parents of students attending these schools to come learn about social media from Ashley Sametz who is a threat intelligence professional working for the York Regional Police Service.

Ashley's background is that she's become something of a subject matter expert in open source technology (facebook, twitter, etc) and how it's being used in ways that impact criminal activity, both knowingly and unknowingly.

During her career, she's seen a lot of incidents where teens or young people misuse social media and other social networking technology in ways that can have lifelong consequences. Whether it's a criminal charge or their reputation is damaged, the effects are far reaching and often never considered by the end user.

Her "presentation" is basically equal parts social media no-no's and a bit of a show and tell about what she can find (and really, ANYONE) can find out about you online - IF you aren't careful. Additionally, she uses a lot of real-life examples of people saying / posting things online that end up having criminal consequences - sexting, online bullying, hate crime, etc.

When: March 2, 2017

Where: Stratford Northwestern Drama room

428 Forman Ave

Stratford, Ontario

Time: 7pm